Historical Context

The mosaic is composed of thousands of tiny tesserae, or tiles, made from marble, limestone, and other materials. Each tessera is carefully cut and placed, creating a vibrant and detailed depiction of the city.

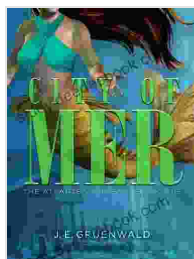

The mosaic is also notable for its exceptional preservation. Despite being submerged in the ocean for centuries, the colors and details remain remarkably intact. This is likely due to the unique composition of the tesserae, which contain natural minerals that protect them from corrosion.
