A Lifetime of Dedication to Environmental Protection

Erika Parker Price was born in New York City in 1965. She grew up in a family that was passionate about the environment. Her father was a conservationist, and her mother was a wildlife biologist.

Erika's early experiences in nature instilled in her a deep love and respect for the planet. She spent her childhood exploring the woods and fields near her home. She was fascinated by the plants and animals that lived there, and she developed a strong desire to protect them.

Erika's passion for the environment continued to grow as she got older. She studied environmental science in college, and she went on to work for a variety of environmental organizations.

In 1995, Erika founded Earth Rescue. She was inspired to start the organization after she saw the devastating effects of pollution on the environment. Erika wanted to create an organization that would help people understand the importance of protecting the planet and would inspire them to take action.

Earth Rescue: A Force for Change
