Sister Sarah pursued theological and social work studies at the University of Birmingham, where her interest in social justice issues sparked. She was particularly inspired by the writings of Dorothy Day and the Catholic Worker Movement, which emphasised the importance of practical action to alleviate poverty and inequality.

Missionary Work in India

In 1964, Sister Sarah embarked on a journey that would profoundly shape her life: a missionary assignment to India. She joined the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur in Patna, Bihar, a state known for its widespread poverty and social disparities.

Initially working as a teacher, Sister Sarah soon recognised the need for a more holistic approach to addressing the underlying causes of poverty. She established a community health centre, providing medical care, nutrition programs, and educational opportunities to the local community.

Empowering the Marginalised

Sister Sarah's unwavering commitment extended beyond healthcare. She recognised the systemic barriers faced by the marginalised, particularly women and children. She founded and led the Forum for Mahila Vikas (Women's Development), an organisation dedicated to empowering women and fighting against gender discrimination.

Through education, skill development, and advocacy, Sister Sarah and her team worked tirelessly to dismantle the social and cultural practices that perpetuated inequality. They challenged traditional gender roles, promoted women's rights, and provided a safe space for women to seek support and share their stories.

Advocacy for Social Justice

Sister Sarah's work did not stop at the grassroots level. She actively engaged with policymakers and government officials, advocating for systemic changes that would create a more just and equitable society.

She represented the Catholic Church at international conferences, where she condemned social and economic inequality, called for the eradication of poverty, and urged world leaders to prioritise the well-being of the marginalised.

Her eloquent speeches and passionate advocacy drew attention to the plight of the poor and influenced policy decisions that impacted the lives of millions.

Compassion and Service

Throughout her long and impactful career, Sister Sarah Pick has consistently embodied the principles of compassion, service, and selflessness.

She has dedicated her life to serving those who are often forgotten and overlooked. Her unwavering presence and gentle touch have brought solace and hope to countless individuals.

Sister Sarah's legacy is one of compassion, advocacy, and transformative action. She has inspired generations of activists, social workers, and people of faith to dedicate their lives to the pursuit of social justice and the well-being of all.

Recognition and Impact

Sister Sarah Pick's contributions to social justice and the empowerment of the poor have been widely recognised and celebrated.

She has received numerous awards, including the prestigious Templeton Prize in 1995 for her "exceptional contributions to affirming life's spiritual dimension."

Her work has inspired countless individuals and organisations around the world, leaving an enduring impact on the fight against poverty, inequality, and the marginalisation of the most vulnerable.

Sister Sarah Pick is a visionary leader, a tireless advocate for the poor and marginalised, and an embodiment of compassion and service.

Through her unwavering dedication to social justice, she has transformed countless lives and inspired generations to work towards a more just and equitable world.

Sister Sarah's legacy will continue to inspire and guide those who believe in the power of love, compassion, and service to create a world where all are valued and have the opportunity to flourish.
